Hillsborough's Hero Brothers Brothers actions called "Absolute heroism at its finest"

Vincent and Jake Heck of Hillsborough went riding in the back of their mother's van, planning for Easter weekend away from home. Just before 6 a.m. Melissa observed sparks coming from under a pickup truck traveling in the opposite direction. Suddenly the truck swerved across the road, and crashed into a rock ledge.

Vincent, 21, shouted to his mother to pull over, jumped out of the van and ran to the truck with Jake, 16, right behind.

They found the unconscious driver had been thrown up on the dashboard and Vincent began pulling him out of the vehicle, while Jake searched for other survivors before helping his brother carry the man from the fire about 10 seconds before it went up in flames.

Vincent received CPR and first-aid training through the Red Cross, and Jake, who took a CPR course with the Hillsboro Fire Department, began checking his injuries. Jake, noticing the man was having trouble breathing, used a chin-lift technique to open his airways, while also monitoring his pulse, and wiped blood from his face and disinfected a cut and stayed with the man until first responders arrived to take him to Cheshire Medical Center.

As of Friday afternoon the patient was in stable condition, according to Nelson Fire Chief Joseph Sarcione, who said, "If it weren't for the heroic actions of those two boys, it would've been a whole different ballgame." Keene Fire Captain Chris Staples described the incident as "Absolute heroism at its finest."

Kearsarge students gain a valuable lesson in government operations

Students in the Kearsarge Regional High School Sustainability Club recently learned a valuable civics lesson. That lesson contained both good news and bad news.

Members had spent months developing an ordinance to ban plastic bags in New London. The ordinance they authored was placed on the town warrant. It banned single-use plastic bags at retail checkout, with exemptions for produce. Club members attending Town Meeting were proud to receive the overwhelming support of New London residents who adopted the ban.

However, on March 31st, the Select Board sent the club a letter containing the bad news that the town lacked the authority to establish the plastic bag ban, and the ordinance they'd worked to enact could not be enforced.

Refusing to give up, the students plan to take their work to the state level.

The New Hampshire House of Representatives recently tabled HB

1119, which would have explicitly given towns the right to regulate paper and plastic bags. It turns out New London wasn't alone in its failed attempt to ban plastic bags. Currently towns do not have what's known as home rule, therefore Select Boards in New London and elsewhere do not have authority to adopt their own plastic bag ordinance. The New London Select Board has encouraged students to get in touch with their state legislators, including Rep. Karen Ebel, (D-New London), who is active in efforts to reduce waste streams and improve recycling in New Hampshire.

Members of the Sustainability Club say that regardless of the outcome in New London, they are better prepared to participate in government.

Center Woods Elementary School students studying engineering

Under the creative guidance of enrichment teacher Kate Rodgers, first, second, and third-graders are learning about catapult engineering, hydroponic gardening, and programming robots at Center Woods Elementary School in Weare. The enrichment program at CWES has also grown over the last four years from pullout sessions for exceptional students to a whole school approach to enrichment.

"Enrichment is good for all kids. It allows time and space to discover a passion for something they may not have been exposed to before," said Rodgers, who now sees one class from each grade every week and six small group sessions several times a week. At the end of the year, every student in grades 1-3 has had an enrichment experience with Mrs. Rodgers several times.

One of the enrichment sessions runs like a book club where everyone reads the same novel and talks about it together, bringing important issues up for discussion. "While reading The One and Only Ivan, a true story of a gorilla kept at a mall, 3rd graders had conversations about what it is like to live in a domain not meant for you. And, what it means to make big promises and how to fulfill them. These issues are likely ones students will face themselves one day," said Rodgers.

In robot programming and other STEM-based enrichment sessions, Rodgers includes teaching about digital citizenship beginning in the first grade. "I teach them that they are responsible for their digital footprint, and that footprint will follow them for life. We talk about how important it is to be polite and not negative when commenting online, how to protect your information, and be safe online."

Rodgers says being a mom makes her keenly aware of the importance of how technology is introduced. "I see it like this," said Rodgers. "If you hand a kid a device like a phone at the age of 11 but don't give them any instruction about the technology--the good and the bad--it is like showing a kid the City of Manchester and then dropping them in New York City to figure the city out alone."

Rodgers says she loves her job at Center Woods and, with a big smile, says she often feels very popular. "There's nothing better than having a kid holler in the hall--when can I come to see you?! Enrichment classes foster natural curiosity and show kids how fun it is to learn," she concluded.

"Students skip their way to enrichment classes because they are so excited," said Center Woods Elementary Principal Jess Potter. "Everything Ms. Rodgers does during enrichment meets our Portrait of A Learner competencies. Additionally, our students further develop their collaboration and communication skills when working in teams and sharing ideas in enrichment."

Bradford's Fabulous Fenton Family steps up again at Easter

Area Police Departments partnered with the Appleseed Restaurant in Bradford to deliver over 135 dinners to the elderly, those in need or those spending Easter at home. Meals consisted of ham, potatoes, vegetables, a roll and dessert.

People often ask if the police department takes donations or is in need of anything. To this question, I will answer by saying please make a small donation to the Appleseed Restaurant and tell them to put it towards the meals for the next holiday.

Former college coach indicted

Former Colby-Sawyer College assistant basketball coach Joshua Pincoske, 47, has been indicted by a grand jury on two charges of human trafficking. He is accused of paying two minors for a sexually explicit performance. According to an affidavit, the case goes back to December 2020, when two 17-year-old Farmington girls reported inappropriate sexual contact. The smiles on the faces of those accepting deliveries at their homes is very rewarding. When they ask why the Fenton Family does this time after time we simply tell them, "Because nice matters."

Meals went out to Bradford, Newbury, Sunapee, Warner, Henniker, Hopkinton/Contoocook and New London.

Mary Beth Fenton (r) filled one of the boxes for Bradford families.

Man crashes motorcycle after long pursuit

A Peterborough man was flown to a Boston hospital after crashing his motorcycle during a police pursuit Friday night in Dublin. According to Peterborough Police Chief Scott Guinard, the motorcyclist was initially taken to Monadnock Community Hospital in Peterborough before being flown to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston. Guinard did not know how serious the man's injuries were. Peterborough Police received a call Friday at 9:45 p.m. that Dublin Police were in pursuit of a motorcycle that had crossed into Peterborough, Guinard said. The driver was traveling east on Route 101 and attempted to make a left turn onto Union Street when he lost control of the motorcycle and crashed into the guardrail.

Goffstown man rescued off Mt. Eisenhower

A Goffstown man was carried off Mount Eisenhower after he slipped on wet rocks and hurt his leg Friday afternoon. According to a news release from the New Hampshire Department of Fish and Game, Michael LaChance, 49, of Goffstown was nearly at the top of the mountain when he slipped. He could not put weight on one of his legs, and called 911 just before 5 p.m. Friday. Nearly 30 volunteers from the four volunteer rescue services worked with eight conservation officers to help LaChance. They hiked four miles to reach him, then carried him in a litter four miles back to the trailhead, and then he was driven to the hospital.

Henniker Select Board reopens Transfer Station to accept brush

Some time ago, the town discontinued the acceptance of brush for burning at the Transfer Station. Some residents at recent Selectboard meetings have requested the town renew the acceptance of brush. Town Administrator Diane Kendall does not recommend accepting brush.

The transfer station does not have the capacity to monitor, store and dispose of brush in accordance with the BMP issued by the State Department of Environmental Services. Chipping is the preferred method of managing brush piles. Burning is the least preferred.

Both methods require the brush pile to be free of "non-conforming materials" which requires safety measures, space, staff capacity and funds to dispose.

Burning should not be an option because it is obnoxious to nearby neighbors, subject to strict regulation, weather dependent, costly, laborious and pollutant.

Scott Dias, on behalf of the Henniker Chamber of Commerce, urged the Select Board to reopen the Transfer Station to accept residents' brush.

Transfer Station Superintendent Marc Boisvert does not have the staff capacity to monitor, store and dispose of brush in accordance with the Best Management Practices issued by the State Department of Environmental Services. Boisvert is evaluating cost alternatives to have an outside vendor come in to either haul brush or chip and haul brush.

Tia Hooper suggested that while the Board is deciding between burning and chipping, the facility should be reopened for brush disposal. Fire Chief Jim Morse agreed and the Board agreed to do so.

TAKE YOUR MEDICINE

Commonly used medications for type 2 diabetes and obesity called glucagon-like peptide-1 receptor agonists (GLP-1 RAS), are not associated with an increased risk of breast cancer, despite previous studies that suggested a possible link, according to a study presented virtually at ENDO 2021, the Endocrine Society's annual meeting. GLP-1 RAs have been shown to be effective in treating obesity and type 2 diabetes and in reducing heart disease. These drugs include albiglutide (Tanzeum); dulaglutide (Trulicity); exenatide (Byetta); extended-release exenatide (Bydureon); liraglutide (Victoza, Saxenda); lixisenatide (Adlyxin); and semaglutide (Ozempic, Rybelsus). In clinical trials of liraglutide, subjects treated with the active drug instead of a placebo had a higher number of breast cancers. The new study was designed to assess whether patients treated with GLP-1 RAs had a higher risk of breast cancer or benign growths in the breasts called neoplasms.

Although Tuberculosis, or TB, killed nearly as many people as COVID-19 (approx. 1.8 million) in 2020, it did not receive as much media and public attention. The pandemic has proven that transmissible infection is indeed a global issue. Science tells us that iron is crucial for daily human function, but it is also an essential element for the survival of viruses and bacteria. For some time, scientists have known that depriving infections of iron can limit bacterial burden and help improve patient outcomes. Scientists have recently applied such a trick (of binding iron to support the immune system) to the treatment of TB, along with a new TB antimicrobial called Bedaquiline. The findings have been published in the International Journal of Molecular Sciences. Bedaquiline has been in use for less than 10 years for multi-drug resistant TB, but even as new antituberculosis drugs are introduced, the TB bacteria will become increasingly resistant.

A GENTLER STRATEGY FOR AVOIDING CHILDHOOD DENTAL DECAY

The combination of a carb-heavy diet and poor oral hygiene can leave children with early childhood caries (ECC), a severe form of dental decay that can have a lasting impact on their oral and overall health.

Dr. Esin Narli a two form a sticky symplocic known scientifically as a biofilm that becomes

The two form a sticky symbiosis, known scientifically as a biofilm, that becomes extremely virulent and difficult to displace from the tooth surface.

While some cases of ECC are treated with drugs that kill the microbes directly, potentially reducing the number of pathogens in the mouth, this doesn't always effectively break down the biofilm and can have off-target effects on "good" microbes as well as the soft tissues in the oral cavity.

Using three different enzymes, scientists applied each to a biofilm growing on a tooth-like surface in a human saliva medium and left it for five minutes. Following the treatment, they noted that the overall biofilm volume was reduced. Using powerful microscopy, they also observed drastic reductions in the biofilm thickness and interactions between bacteria and yeast. The pH of the surrounding medium was higher when exposed to the enzymes, indicating an environment that is not as acidic and thus less conducive to tooth decay.

They also measured how easy it was to break up the biofilm after treatment, using a device that applies a stress, akin to tooth brushing.

Five tips for supporting brain health

Did you know that there are steps you can take to help with your brain health?

1) Use it or lose it. Whether it's crossword puzzles, reading or painting, keeping your brain mentally stimulated may help keep it young.

2) Get enough sleep. Sleep deprivation can lead to problems with memory and cognitive abilities. Sleep is essential for brain maintenance, like removing built-up toxins in your brain.

3) Stay social. Isolation or loneliness in older adults is associated with a 50% increased risk of developing dementia and a 26% increased risk of all-cause mortality, according to the American Journal of Geriatric Psychiatry. Engaging in activity clubs can help you increase your social interaction and help you stay active.

4) Make healthier lifestyle choices. Studies show moderate exercise can help improve brain function, especially in the areas responsible for learning and memory. Improving these parts of the brain may fight pre-Alzheimer's changes often seen in midlife. Talk to your health plan about fitness programs that may be available at no additional cost. Other lifestyle choices, like eating a healthy diet, may also help reduce cardiovascular risk while helping to slow brain aging.

5) Manage chronic illnesses. Common diseases in older adults, such as diabetes and heart disease, may affect brain function. Talk with your health care provider about treatment plans to help you manage chronic conditions. In addition to these five steps, it is important to have a memory screening completed each year. Having a record of your brain function year to year may help your health care practitioner diagnose memory disorders earlier. Memory screenings can be performed during your Annual Wellness Visit, which is free to anyone on Medicare. Make sure to ask your physician to perform a memory evaluation the next time you visit the doctor's office.

UnitedHealthcare Medicare Advantage members can also take advantage of the HouseCalls program, which offers an annual health and wellness visit in the convenience and privacy of your home, at no additional cost. A HouseCalls licensed practitioner can conduct a memory screening and refer you to additional care, if needed. If you feel like you or a loved one might be suffering from symptoms of dementia, contact your health care provider. (BPT)

SECURING COVERAGE FOR WINTER STORM LOSSES

Many businesses may have a valuable asset available in the form of first-party insurance. First-party property policies generally provide insurance for "direct physical loss of or damage to property." An "all-risk" property policy insures against all risks of loss unless expressly excluded. Traditional losses not excluded from first-party property policies may include tangible property, including buildings, permanently installed machinery or equip-

By: Joyce Bosse ment, inventory and fixtures. Most property insurance policies also insure personal property. This coverage may be provided by an "unscheduled personal property" provision, which provides coverage for unscheduled personal property that is "usual or incidental to the occupancy of the premises" or "used by an insured while on the described premises." Property insurance may exclude certain intangible losses if the insurer proves the excluded peri is the cause of loss. However, some courts have held that if a property is left unusable, such as by freezing or the presence of harmful substances, a first-party property policy may provide coverage.

Insurers may contest whether freezing is physical loss or damage sufficient to trigger property damage or business interruption coverage. Under an all risk policy, a policyholder must only show that it suffered a fortuitous direct physical loss of or damage to insurable property during the policy period from any cause. To avoid paying an otherwise covered loss, an insurer bears a steep burden of proving that the loss was caused by an excluded peril.

Insurers may attack policyholders' assertions that their losses involved physical loss or damage. With regard to freezing, during the winter storm businesses may have experienced property damage by way of expanding and contracting pipes, and personal property damage to material or products transmitted in pipes, such as fuel, left unusable by extreme cold. A policyholder's losses arising from its inability to use its insured personal property for the intended function or purpose because of freezing should be viewed as covered property damage.
